

Cuneiform Luvian Corpus by H. Craig Melchert (last revised 7/20/01).

In preparing this corpus I have generally accepted the organization of the texts as given by Frank Starke, Die keilschrift-luwischen Texte in Umschrift (StBoT 30). However, my readings and restorations differ from his in a number of instances, and I am responsible for all morpheme divisions marked by “=”. One should check the cuneiform editions, Starke’s apparatus, and also for the older texts the readings of Heinrich Otten, Luwische Texte in Umschrift, which are in several instances superior to those of Starke. For the sake of clarity, the surrounding Hittite context has been included in many cases. However, since my object is a corpus of Luvian language, not of Luvian-derived rituals, I have omitted entirely texts of this genre that as attested contain no Luvian. Hittite is marked in blue. The few instances of Palaic are in red. The assignment of certain words to one language or the other is in some cases arguable. One should again compare Starke’s version. Since I know of no linguistic significance in the choice of particular symbol for the “Glossenkeil”, I have for simplicity used consistently √.
